“ What an awesome kid. I met him virtually online at a time when we had to live through an academic school year of virtual education due to Covid. I could tell he was just that type of student that really wanted to do well. He would send numerous emails to let me know he had completed his work or needed help with a math concept. Andrew was the type of student that you would always remember because he always went beyond what was expected of him and at a time when many students struggled with virtual learning he showed the maturity of a college student doing online learning.

To the Family I know your heart is heavy, I can't even begin to say I know what you may be feeling right now; I know the loss is a great one. When I learned about his untimely death, I felt like someone had punched me in my stomach. A life, swept away to early

Our journey may have many paths some long and some that conclude in just a single step. However, it is inevitable that no matter how wonderful or sorrowful the journey through life may be, it will eventually come to an end and we too must transition onward.

It is in times like these where someone's journey has come to an end that we pause to reflect on the one who has gone before us and to remember that life is a gift. Be it a spouse, mother, father, child, sister, brother, grandparent, aunt, uncle, relative or friend, let us acknowledge the life and cherish the memory of this one light that has dimmed - gone too soon.

*Respectfully,
Ms. Robertson
