“ What kind of adult is so likable that a group of high school age boys would repeatedly get up at 7 am on Saturday morning to run around in the woods and play games? One of a kind. The kind who introduces them to a new sport called paintball. The kind who makes these games extra dramatic by staging an “Alamo” attack. Or by dragging out his shot in the chest with a few extra spins and laughable hoots and hollers before crumbling to the ground. The kind who picked you up in one of two cool cars... a Delorean or a limo. The kind who embraced the looks we’d get as we unloaded duffle bags and briefcases from the limo in full camo and walk into the trees. The kind who named different parts of the forest so he could direct his soldiers where to go. Hoopers Store. The Shotgun. The Black Forest. The Fingers. The kind who could repair your equipment mid-game, but if he couldn’t, he’d give you his own gun to use while he played “decoy”. The kind who would give you last of his ammo. The kind who would enforce goggle safety but also make fun of the tough cop that came to our site to tell us we couldn’t use the parking lot the limo was in. The kind who wouldn’t mind turning an abandoned Story Book Land into a battle course. The kind with enough ingenuity in him to understand that you don’t need the best gear or the best site or the best situation or the best team or the best weather to make the best of a moment. You just need a Scott.

“ Scott was born into the same house that I lived. I am his uncle, but, only by 5 years. For those first years of life, he and I were inseparable. He was at that time like a brother ... great memories of playing in the back yard of 2516 Arlington Blvd ... an odd place where imagination reigned supreme. And we did dream ... as astronauts, fishermen, soldiers of war ... Be at Peace, Scott, from the troubles of this world. God bless Uncle Ken.

“ My first memory... Scott built houses outside for my barbie dolls to play in. In the summer they were made of hay & in the winter snow.

He taught me how to ride a bike. Then he, Patricia and I spent lazy summer afternoons riding around the neighborhood.

He taught me how to dance. He'd memorize all the latest trends from Soul Train & American Bandstand. The Hustle, Brooklyn Shuffle, The Robot etc.... he knew them all and I thought he was so much better than John Travolta.

He bondo'd & painted my very first car. Then he taught me how to drive it... it was a stick shift, so not for the faint of heart.

He never RSVP'd and always arrived late to my house... making an entrance with some fun toy or game in hand for the kids to play with him.

He'd fall asleep at the end of a family party, with his little boys draped all around him exhausted from the day's events.
